This special luncheon workshop, conducted by the Griffith Insurance Education Foundation for the NCOIL Institute for Insurance Policy, is provided to enhance policymakers' understanding about International insurance regulation and supervision.

An Education Workshop for NCOIL 2011 Annual Meeting Attendees

The Train is Coming: How Will International Regulation Preempt U.S. Authority?

Thursday, November 17th 11:30A.M. -12:45P.M.
Lunch will be provided

Workshop Overview: This session is intended to be a basic principles overview of International insurance regulation and supervision. As industry stakeholders begin to devote increasing resources to international efforts, state legislators must carefully monitor the work of the organizations. To establish a framework for that consideration, a basic primer on the scope, format and process of the various international cooperative organizations will be provided. The session will provide an overview of the "alphabet soup" of international insurance organizations including IAIS, EIOPA, FSB, the Joint Forum and IASB. Questions to be addressed include: What are the various models for multinational supervision? In the discussion over financial stability and systemic risk, where is the US market interconnected globally? How do international agreements and global insurance markets impact US insurers and markets?

Please join us for lunch as W. Jean Kwon, Ph.D., CPCU, Faculty Chair and Professor, the School of Risk Management at St. John's University conducts this special session.
